

FREESTYLE PUBLIC RELATIONS DOUBLES SIZE OF TECH PRACTICE

PR Agency Adds Clients in Data Analytics, High-Tech Sports Apparel and Mobile Payments

DES MOINES, IOWA - Jan. 27, 2014 - Freestyle Public Relations, a high-tech public relations consultancy offering tailored communication services to several emerging and established tech markets, announced today that it has been selected as the Agency-of-Record for three new high-tech clients based throughout the country. The agency's breadth of experience in multiple tech markets, affordable budget, capacity to secure unprecedented media opportunities and experience managing integrated marcom programs were the main reasons Freestyle was chosen. Decision Lens, a Virginia-based data analytics firm hired Freestyle to support its entire PR program. IM Custom, a California based high-tech sports apparel startup selected the agency to help it quickly generate brand awareness amongst its customers and Zipmark, a New York City-based startup that required a methodical PR program to help raise visibility in the burgeoning mobile payment industry and SMB market.

Freestyle has been serving high-tech clients since its inception. The firm's uncanny ability to generate crossover brand publicity between its B2B and B2C clientele make it one of the most results-driven PR consultancies. In a matter of just two months Zipmark received significant press attention in Entrepreneur magazine, the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal, a result of Freestyle's industry reputation of delivering maximum brand exposure.

"Since Freestyle's inception in 2006 the agency has been a trailblazer at consistently delivering high-impact results: brand exposure that opens new sales channels; generating investor inquiries; media exposure with the Who's Who of industry and national media and social media programs that turn ordinary firms into sought after brands," said David Splivalo, chief consultant of Freestyle Public Relations.
